

HEALTHY LUNCHES

Lunch can be just as important as dinner to a healthy family food culture.

I've struggled for years with eating at healthy intervals with balance. I admit there have been some days a coffee has gotten me all the way to 2pm. Not the best way to stay energized. So let there be lunch!

- Lunches serve 2-3 and work both for school age children and adults alike.
- Invest in a great lunch or bento box. Nothing takes the charm out of lunch like a brown paper bag.
- Vegetarian, Gluten Free and Dairy Free adjustments and substitutions are included for each meal.

Vegetarian

Gluten Free

Dairy Free

- A thermos with a wide mouth is highly recommended.

What follows is a simple six week plan to help you get out of a sandwich and salad rut. Use it to keep health and happiness during the day.

To your wild success,

LUNCH BASICS

Common lunch items

LUNCH MEAT

Look for organic, minimally processed meats instead of processed deli meat. Ask the deli counter for an ingredient list to limit preservatives.

GRANOLA BARS

Not all packaged bars are unhealthy. Many companies offer organic, low sugar bars that can easily be added to lunch. Pay attention to the sugar and sodium content of packaged foods. As with any lunch product, if the ingredients are confusing, chances are it's not the healthiest option. The best solution is to make your own bars. You would not believe how easy they are to make.

CHIPS

I don't want to get on a soap box, but chips just don't equate to health. Even the baked versions are loaded with preservatives. If you include chips in your lunch plans, look for natural chips that have no more than 3 ingredients: potato, oil and salt.

CRACKER SANDWICHES

If you notice the color of the cheese in some of the cracker sandwiches on the market, you can visually identify that it is not loaded with nutrition. It is always better to make your own. Whole grain crackers and slices of low-fat, natural cheese are a delicious alternative.

JUICE BOXES

I love the simplicity of grabbing a juice box and throwing into the lunch bag. However, it is not the best option. Juice is very highly concentrated in sugar. As a mom, it sometimes comes down to the lesser of two evils and juice is better than soda. Water is, by far, the best option. Either way, the most sustainable way to include drinks with lunch is to purchase a reusable drink container and fill it yourself.

YOGURT

Avoid gelatin based yogurts with heavy sweeteners. Many yogurt manufacturers have a healthier version than the ones marketed to kids with characters on the packaging. For optimal health buy plain Greek yogurt and add honey and/or fruit.

PEANUT OR NUT BUTTER

There should only be one ingredient: nuts.

COOKIES

Brands have made it very easy to purchase little cookie pouches as a filler to daily lunch. Cookies are not part of the lunch bunch. Cookies are a treat, not a food group. Limit use as a lunch staple. Better yet, bake a batch at home and freeze them for an occasional lunch inclusion.

Fruit Roll Ups are not fruit. Read the label. Is the first ingredient fruit?

TIPS

Use whole grains. Sweeten with honey or 100% maple syrup.

Buy organic, minimally processed lunch meat instead of processed, packaged deli meat.

Look for bread that is high in fiber and made with whole grains. If bread has more than 7 ingredients, skip it.

HEALTHY LUNCH HABITS

CLEAR OUT THE JUNK

The best offense for health is to eliminate the junk from the kitchen. I don't know about you but if there is a cookie or bag of chips in the house, I can't deny an after school craving for salt and fat. Two of the biggest culprits of an unhealthy family food culture are chips and soda. Clear them out of the cupboards. They have no place in a healthy lunch.

Consider the ingredients and products you keep on hand. Read labels. Opt out of purchasing products that are high in preservatives, artificial flavors and coloring. When it comes to lunch, this can be difficult. There are hundreds of food products lining the shelves promising to make packing lunch easier. Walk on by. You can do better without processed junk. Your children's teachers will thank you for clearing out the junk because kids that eat healthy food during the day have more energy, better concentration and perform better academically. That's a fairly compelling reason to stay away from processed cheese dip and cookie pouches.

PLAN AHEAD

I can't emphasize enough how much a little planning can ward off frustration on busy mornings. Make as much as you can at the beginning of the week so making lunch can be a grab and go process. Another trick is to prep lunch just before bedtime as part of the wind down routine.

Stock your pantry with healthy, frequently eaten non-perishables. If you have a healthy supply of nut butter and honey, lunch can never be too far behind. Buy oatmeal, pasta, granola bars, etc. in bulk so you will always have enough fill-ins when you are running low on lunch ideas.

PICKY EATERS

This is one of the hardest elements to plan for. How do you know that all that delicious, real food you prepare will get eaten by your picky eater? Well, you don't. There is a light at the end of the tunnel.

One of the best ways to battle a picky eater is to get them involved. Give them a list of lunch foods so you can discuss their preferences and mark their favorites. Put the desired foods in each lunch and introduce new foods a little bit at a time. Make a calendar and stick it to the fridge so kids know what to expect each day. Most importantly, listen to their concerns or aversions to foods and try to create solutions together. We all like to have a say, kids are no different.
